

Edward Rowland Sill: His Life and Work (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Edward Rowland Sill: His Life and Work It is more than ten years since, in a burst of enthusiasm and admiration, I undertook to prepare a Life of Sill. Enthusiasm and admiration have continued unabated, but circumstances interposed to delay the work; not, I am now inclined to think, to its detriment. Had I gone forward unimpeded, working out the plan I then had in mind, the result would have been different, partaking of the nature of essay and criticism. But midway of my task I fell under the influence of that great master of the art of biography, Sir Leslie Stephen, whose dicta upon the subject changed the course I was taking. Nobody, said he, ever wrote a dull autobiography; and he added, The biographer can never quite equal the autobiographer, but with a sufficient supply of letters he may approach very closely to the same result. About the same time a saying of Sills, which I had probably read half a dozen times without seeing its application to the matter in hand, came home to me and reinforced the remarks of Sir Leslie, - Let a man write about himself. Its the only fellow he knows anything about. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
